Hang 'Em High

Hobby farmers always need a good ladder for things like changing lights in the barn aisle, cutting down limbs from large trees or for heat gunning the trim on the house. But don't perch on a perilously balanced ladder. Thanks to Ladder King, you don't have to rely on the evenness of the ground to get the job done. This three-legged ladder, with a base of between 35 and 57 inches, can stand anywhere from 6 to 16 feet tall and enables the ladder to balance on any type of terrain. It's third-leg assembly pivots on a solid 1/2-inch steel rod. An added bonus: the ladder's tapered neck allows you to reach higher limbs. Ladder King also manufactures a four-legged ladder and a small stepstool; (888) 875-6477; www.ladderking.com

Get Your Goat

Goats can be some of the most destructive animals on the farm. They seem to take great delight in tipping over feeders and spilling expensive feed and hay onto the ground. Billy Goat Gruff designed a heavy-duty trough that cannot be overturned or pushed around by goats. Manufactured by Tarter Gate, the overhead guard prevents determined goats from standing in their food. Its low-to-the-ground, V-shaped design makes it a perfect fit for any size goat; (800) REDGATE; www.tartergate.com
